13 minutes ago — Avatar: Fire and Ash is an inspiring spiritual drama that unveils the extraordinary life of a yogi dedicated to truth, inner peace, and self-discovery. The film follows Ajey's journey from his early struggles to his transformation into a guiding light for those seeking wisdom and enlightenment. Through his story, audiences witness the courage, devotion, and discipline required to pursue a higher path

here was a moment, in the first 15 minutes of director Luke Greenfield's new Prime Video action comedy Playdate, when I took the following note: "Is this going to be genuinely insufferable?"

By the time I was halfway through, the answer had coalesced into an unmistakable, resounding yes. In more than a decade of reviewing films for Paste, I've rarely come across anything as vastly irritating and downright embarrassing as Playdate, a film that stars Kevin James and Alan Ritchson as a classic odd couple buddy pairing of awkward dads becoming embroiled in a mystery alongside their even more awkward sons. Is Playdate technically among the worst movies I've ever seen, then? Perhaps "worst movies” isn’t quite the right term, given that my passion for schlock and earnest failure has nursed multiple bad movie columns over the years as well. Playdate isn’t that sort of technical marvel of incompetence, even though it’s rough on that front as well; rather, it’s the perfect

Playdate will shake your faith in the idea of ever popping on a direct-to-streaming original, lest you again end up watching something like this. We’re talking dreck, plain and simple

Early in the trailer, after Bowser puts the finishing touches on his The Scream-inspired painting of Dry Bones Mario — a callback to the Skeleton Suit from Super Mario Odyssey — he goes upstairs to meet with Mario and Luigi. In the process, he hums a little tune: "Sippin' the soup, cleanin' the paint, doo-do-lee-do, doo-do-lee-do." Bowser's song is set to the tune of his theme from Super Mario 64, though it's much cheerier

It does take a long time. We're not that quick to churn out a season, and we didn't want to rush into it if it's not good," says co-creator Raj at a roundtable with Variety in Mumbai following the trailer launch. The creative duo behind the series acknowledged that while they were working on other projects
